INTRODUCE YOURSELF

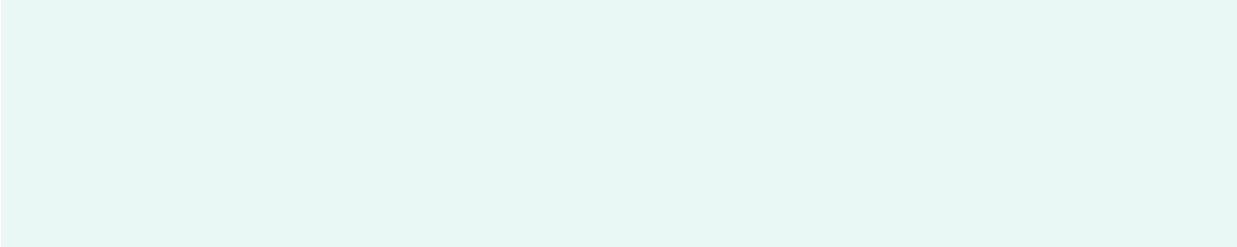

Tell Your Audience About the Author

Your readers will want to know a little bit about who wrote the work they invested in. Share some details you'd like your readers to know about you. This could include things like your life background, your interests, your family, and the inspiration behind becoming an author. And don't forget to add a nice photo of yourself so your readers can get an even better idea of who you are!

Outline Your Chapters

Now that you have a high-level timeline of how your book will flow, listing out and briefly outlining the chapters you plan to write about will help prevent you from losing your place or feeling stuck when it comes time to actually write your book.

Think of outlining your chapters as a map to lead to you the treasure of finishing your book! Use this space to list out a rough chapter list and a few details and characters or people you plan to write about in each chapter.

Note: Your book can have more than or less than the number of chapters listed here... this is just a starting point!
